His 1965 classic, The Triumph of the Therapeutic (also perpetually in print), anticipated with remarkable insight what scholars now call the postmodern condition: ironic detachment, rejection of moral certainties and rebellion against cultural norms, as well as the new strategies of self-management that have replaced old-fashioned forms of self-discipline.

Philip Rieff's Charisma | R. R. Reno | First Things

The Triumph of the Therapeutic (1966) The dialectic of perfection, based on a deprivational mode, is being succeeded by a dialectic of fulfillment, based on the appetitive mode. There may be a kindness that is neurotic, if it develops out of unconscious compulsions, and a cruelty that is normal, if it is freely and consciously determined upon.
